Paul Manafort has been moved, over his objections, to a new jail with a history of illustrious guests.

Officials confirmed the former Trump campaign chairman was booked Thursday morning into the Alexandria Detention Center, a complex of brick buildings just off the Capital Beltway and a few blocks from the federal courthouse where he is to be tried later this month on bank and tax fraud charges.

"Because he is a high-profile inmate, Mr. Manafort will be placed in protective custody which limits his interactions agent-turned-Soviet mole Robert Hanssen. He was bumped to a smaller cell after trial to make way for Zacarias Moussawi, the only person tried in a U.S. court for involvement in the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks.

Aldrich Ames and Harold James Nicholson, CIA agents who were convicted of spying for the Soviet Union, also were held in Alexandria. So was New York Times reporter Judith Miller after she refused to cooperate with prosecutors in a leak investigation. The extremist politician Lyndon H. LaRouche Jr. faced fraud charges while incarcerated in the jail.

"VIP" Northern Neck Regional Jail Superintendent Ted Hull denied that Manafort was treated differently than prior occupants of the private living unit, which is reserved for "management problematic" inmates. Inmates in the section where Manafort was held were permitted to use a jail-issued tablet that includes a phone app to make calls that inmates are informed are recorded, and to use a meeting area for attorneys, Hull said. Hull said that when jail officials learned Manafort was communicating by email, his attorneys were told to stop the practice.
